The IT Creatures

It gives me great pleasure to be one of the first scholars to be in a position to discuss the Winston Diaries. In this year, 3026, we still are making excavations of the early settlements on the Moon. The area is roughly that bounded by the Niesti Wasteland and the Tomin Depression.

We now know that the first group of spaceships from Earth crashed without any survivors. Finally, in the year 1972, using Earth time as a basis of reckoning, the spaceship ADVENTURE made a successful landing some place east of the Niesti Wasteland. This spaceship was under the command of Captain Herbert Winston.

Though the spaceship did land intact, there was no way of relaunching the crafts at that time. The method used by the Earthlings consisted of a three stage rocket to get the crafts into outer space. Then jet blasters were used either to accelerate or retard the craft. A decade would pass before a method could be developed to relaunch those crafts back to Earth.

My colleague, Professor Insti Nugashi, found the capsule in which the original diary was kept. We suspect, though we do not have any evidence to substantiate our statement, that probably a copy was made and later sent back to Earth. The tidal wave in the year 1989 which overwhelmed the surface of the planet destroyed everything. Later when the floods receded, it was we on the Moon, who had to assist the Earthlings in the deconstruction of a civilization.

What you now are going to read is a translation from the English into our tongue. Dr. Yetteb Seiss was kind enough to go over the rough translation and give it the finishing touches. Need I say he is the greatest living expert on the Moon in regard to such ancient Earth languages as English, French and Russian? So here we are with those sheets that start right after the landing:

"March 12: We took no chances and all of us used our helmets. Together we unloaded the spaceship. We were unable to get any message to Earth for the transmitter had been damaged when we landed. Lieutenant Coring is working on it.

March 13: The testometer shows that there is an atmosphere with oxygen in it covering the Moon. I decided to be the first to remove my helmet. Two of my men were at my side — ready to put the helmet back on my head in case anything went wrong. I turned off the oxygen supply. Everything worked out fine. So we all removed our helmets. However it was decided to keep them ready at our sides with the oxygen supply tanks in case of an emergency.

March 14: We have finished setting up three shelters to take care of the men. There is a peculiar gale wind blowing. Lieutenant Billows suggested we anchor the spaceship. This idea seemed sound and we spent five hours to accomplish the task. No contact as yet established with Earth. We have sufficient supplies to last us for two years.

March 15: Sergeant Davis set up the Etan-Still. We were able to make water using oxygen and hydrogen in the Moon's atmosphere. Glad that problem has been solved. We will later set up the Hydroponic trays to see if we can raise vegetables and fruits. For some reason we all seem to have big appetites and we do enjoy our food. Played recordings of operas this afternoon.

March 16: Private Henderson and myself went out for a short trip in the tractobile. We kept in constant touch with our base. We saw rather large prints on the ground. Whatever it was that made those impressions must be very large. We were armed with our atomic pistols and a ray-gun. To the east there seems to be a mountain range.

March 17: During the night we heard strange noises. Private Lipley was on duty. He immediately turned on the flare lights. Then we saw IT — a gigantic creature — must have weighed about 60 tons at the least. Had a kind of dark brown skin. IT fled and we made no attempt to pursue the creature. Went to the east.

March 18: Had a funny feeling that we were being observed. Hard to explain it. Went out for a trip in the tractobile and we headed for the mountain range. Was much further than we had anticipated. Reached it and realized we would have to fly over it. So back to home base.

March 19: We assembled the X-12 and Lieutenant Jameson did the piloting. We flew over that mountain range and almost crashed in a downdraft. No sign of human life as yet. Nor did we see that creature. Where could IT have gone? Returned to home base and found the men a bit jittery.

March 20: Dr. Kahn examined all of the men. Then he told me the results. We were all perfectly healthy from a physical viewpoint. But definitely the men were starting to show signs of tension. As though something strange were over each one of us. Noticed that some of the men would quarrel with each other at the slightest provocation. Assembled them and gave them each a talk on the necessity of self control and discipline.

March 21: We got a visit from about a dozen of those IT creatures. They remained a distance from our camp and we felt that they were observing us. Private Lipley raised his atomic pistol to shoot one but I stopped him in time. I figured if they let us alone — we let them alone. But we decided to keep an increased constant guard around the camp. We had set up three radar-alarm screens.

March 22: We were beginning to all feel tired. Twice during the day I almost had to pinch myself in order to remain awake. Whatever the cause, it was affecting all of us. Dr. Kahn made us each take a Deodrine tablet which worked because we found we were more alert than before. But I was worried and did my best to conceal it from my men.

March 23: Lieutenant Coring fixed the transmitter. It would seem as though the messages were getting through to Earth. But nothing came from Earth in reply to our messages. We set up the tape recorder to the transmitter so that it would work constantly. Also be able to record any messages received.

March 24: One of our radar screens was showing the effect of some kind of a ray directed against it. A terrific gale wind started to blow. We clocked it at about 135 miles per hour. One of our shelters collapsed. Our spaceship started to move around. We learned something important. When the gale wind ceased, so did the ray reaction on the radar screen. What was the connection between the two? Which one caused the other?

March 25: Still no contact with Earth. We decided to make a long trip. We used two tractobiles and an armored car and took supplies along for two weeks. We were only an hour's drive from our base when the wall of fire started coming toward us. We returned at once and put on our asbestos-heat suits.

March 26: We are all hemmed in by that wall of fire, but it hasn't touched us for some strange reason. Definitely it must be controlled by some outer force. When we approached it to try to penetrate it, the wall of fire retreated. Then it came towards us again. It seems as though we are some kind of prisoners.

March 27: I am going to penetrate that wall of fire. Attached two jet blasters to the tractobile. Slowly I went in the direction of the flames. Then I switched to the two jet blasters, and in a second I was on the other side of the flames which surrounded me. I fired at the ground with my atomic pistol and as a result the fire created by the atomic blast smashed against the flame barrier and destroyed it.

March 28: We are convinced that some kind of life knows we are here. They must have sent the IT creatures to spy on us and report. If we see one of those IT creatures again, we will do our best to capture it alive. We finally received a message from Earth. Glad to know we landed safely. Other spaceships will follow in a year with additional supplies if we need them.

March 29: A section of the earth about a mile from us opened. Something is coming up from that wide gap. We are all on the alert. If there is any fighting to be done, we are well prepared. But I hope things will be settled in a peaceful manner. Something is getting closer and closer to us . . .

Here that entry ends and wasn't finished. Later much more was to be added when friendly contact had been established with the Moonites who lived below the surface of the Moon. One thing still bothers me as I guess it does all modern Moonites.

Why did Captain Herbert Winston refer to our Moon ancestors as the IT creatures? That is an expression that hitherto we have reserved in speaking about the early Earthlings who came to OUR Moon.

— THE END —
